(一) Many governments have implemented the use of biometrics to enhance their safety measures when issuing passports, visas or residence permits to people who migrate to their countries. Biometric measures rely on a computerized system that scans and collects a person's special traits such as his/her fingerprints, face, iris, retina or ear features. This storing of the data can also be utilized to look for or verify a person's identity to reduce the mistakes that might happen when providing the immigration services to travelers.

(二) Climate migration is a unique kind of environmental migration; it describes a type of migration that is caused by climate change. In this context, people who are environmental refugees are usually forced to move away from their places of origin because they cannot live any longer in their residency where their living environment has much been damaged by the drastic change of climate. They usually have to adapt to a different living surrounding when they move to stay in a different place.

(三) It is common for most people to express xenophobia when they encounter strangers, foreigners or immigrants who also stay in their communities or countries. People often tend to discriminate against someone who is different from them. But this dislike or fear of strangers and foreigners from other countries can be strong and unreasonable sometimes. Therefore, it is important that the government should introduce the practice of social inclusion to reduce discrimination against immigrants.

- (四) Some governments carry out the visa waiver program (VWP) by allowing some countries to travel to their nations for a certain phase of time without the need to apply for a visa. But travelers who wish to use this kind of scheme still need to seek for authorization of the countries they plan to travel to. Countries such as the United States impose certain limits on visitors who are eligible for using this service.
- (五) Some countries issue a visa to a family member of an international student in their country as the subsequent entrant. A family member of this kind usually applies for this visa to join or reunite with their family members who study in a foreign country. This kind of visa enables the subsequent entrant to provide emotional, psychological, or mental support to the international student. They are also allowed to stay during the duration of the stay of the international student.
